

There's One in Every Crowd

- You are searching reviews on a new restaurant, and there is one standout from someone who complained about every little aspect of his dining experience.
- The naysayer who holds himself back from taking a risk, and nearly costs you when listening to his advice seeking out a new opportunity.
- The man who wears Bermuda shorts at the grocery store in midwinter. Maybe he is warm enough with his fleece jacket.
- A dog off his leash searching for his owner at a festival prompts the rest of the crowd to be annoyed.
- An over-dressed woman walks into the local bar, although who really cares? Party on.
- At an indoor concert there is that attendee who forgets to turn off his cellphone, and it interrupts a performance for those within ten rows while he fumbles to figure out how to power off.
- Bravo for the concerned cashier in the neighborhood convenience store that smiles and cares about each and every customer.
- Picture a school where academic excellence is truly the most important goal of the district and money goes in that direction first.
- Imagine ne neighborhood house where all the children enjoy congregating after school as the chief hangout is a blessing.
- How annoying is the customer who leaves his shopping cart and drives off without any regard that the next car can't use that space.

- In every meeting, there is one participant who thinks outside the box and inspires the rest to put out on the table the craziest of possibilities, too.
- Of your party invitees, there is one soul who has nut allergies.
- The shopper who returns items to Amazon in equal proportion to purchasing them.
- Don't be offended if you think one of these thoughts is speaking to you directly, and that you have been targeted by me. There's one in every crowd that is overly paranoid.
